Paint and Quality

General

All surfaces to be coated must be CLEAN, SOUND, and DRY.

A CLEAN surface is one that is free of foreign matter eg. Mould growth, grease, wax, oil, old paint dust, release oils, or any other external contaminant.

A surface is rendered clean by use of the following:

1. Detergent or Solvent Washing
2. High pressure water jet or steam cleaning.
3. Mechanical cleaning eg grinding or abrasive blasting.

A SOUND surface is one that is free of matter originating from the surface itself eg friable particles, laitance, rust, millscale and oxidation byproducts.

A surface is rendered sound by the following:

1. Mechanical scraping,
2. Sandblasting or sandpapering
3. Chemical treating eg Acid or detergent washing.

A DRY surface is one characterised as follows:

1. Free of Surface and in substrate Moisture.
2. Free of Ponding.
3. Free of rising and permeating damp.
4. Free of condensation.

Masonry substrates are considered dry and ready for painting when it is free of surface moisture altogether, and when the in subsurface moisture content is below 12%.

While a surface may appear to be dry, moisture within a porous substrate may permeate to the surface, resulting in coating failure. Accordingly, the surface moisture content must be assessed, either by employing a suitably calibrated moisture meter, or in its absence, very simplistically the "Plastic Sheet Test".

Plastic Sheet Test - Lay a sheet of impervious plastic of approximately 1 square metre in area in tight contact with the surface being tested, preferably in the late afternoon. After a minimum of 12 hours examine the underside of the plastic sheet and the area being tested as follows:

1. The underside of the plastic sheet should be free of condensation to indicate a dry surface.
2. Compare the colour of the test area to that of the adjacent. A difference in colour is indicative of an unacceptable moisture content.

In the case of non-porous substrates e.g. steel, aluminium etc. Factors such as DEW POINT (The temperature at which atmospheric moisture will condensate) will affect the performance of the coating. Consequently, coatings should not be applied below the dew point.
